Berliners scrambled across the Berlin Wall at dawn Friday in the first mass eastward flight across the divide, adding a bizarre Berlin touch to the swap of several bits of misplaced land between the two halves of the divided city.

The 182 who escaped were denizens of a squatter camp that had sprung up in May on the "Lenne Triangle," an over-grown lot in the middle of the city and at the heart of the ong-negotiated exchange of 16 chunks of land that for various historical reasons had been stranded in the wrong

After midnight, when the triangle formally passed to West Berlin, the police converged and demanded that the squatters leave. Finally at 5 A.M., 900 policemen moved in, and most of the squatters scrambled up and across the wall — as they had threatened to do — and into waiting East German trucks.

Soviets Approve Sweeping Plan For Reforms as Meeting Ends

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service

MOSCOW - The Soviet Communist Party conference, ending four days of frank debate and startling clashes among senior delegates, approved a major overhaul of the Sovies political system on Friday, including a 10-year limit on the tenure of Mikhail S. Gorbachev and other party officials.

The conference endorsed a package of six related resolutions mandating a partial transfer of power from the party to popularly elected legislatures and an end to party interference in the day-to-day management of the economy and almost every aspect of Soviet life, the news agency Tass said. The resolutions themselves were not published Friday, and it was unclear precisely which proposals were approved and what revisions were made in the recommendations submitted by Mr. Gorbachev and the Central Committee on Tuesday, the opening day of the confer-

Soviet Union has seen since at least the years immediately following the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution when pointed debate was still allowed at party meetings.

Although the concrete impact of the conference on the political sys-tem remains to be seen, and will depend on how the resolutions are put into operation, the meeting clearly altered the political climate. At least one issue, that of party tenure, was made clear, however "The conference stipulated that no single person can be elected for more than 10 years," Central Committee Secretary Anatoli Lukyanov said at a news conference. The limit is not retroactive, so current party officials could serve 10 more years.

This covers all levels of party committees from the district committees to the Central Committee," he said. "It covers the general secretary. ■ President's Role

The conference also approved Mr. Gorbachev's proposal to create a new post of president, apparently clearing the way for him to assume that role. Reuters reported from

Mr. Lukyanov said the president would guide work on all major legislation, decide on the main international issues, represent the Soviet Union abroad and chair the De-fense Council and the Supreme Soviet, or parliament.

Under plans outlined by Mr. Gorbachev in his keynote speech to the conference on Tuesday, the president will be elected by a new 250-member Congress of People's Deputies.

"The Congress of People's Dep-uties will become the supreme organ of power," Mr. Lukyanov said. Mr. Gorbachev on Friday pronounced the conference a success for his perestroika reforms. "I believe we have grounds to say the conference has fulfilled all its goais," the Kremlin leader told the delegates as he closed the four-day gathering.

WASHINGTON — A permanent Iranian Silkworm missile site, at which launch preparations would be almost impossible to detect, is expected to become operational on the Strait of Hormuz this fall, increasing dramatically the military threat in the Gulf region, according to the top U.S. com-mander for the Middle East.

Lieutenant General George B. Crist, the head of the U.S. Central Command, said the United States was responding to the bunkered, underground site by stationing an Aegis cruiser equipped with the navy's most sophisticated anti-missile weaponry within range of the General Crist said Thursday that the cruiser would be ordered to fire against any Silkworm launched, regardless of its intended target.

The permanent facility, with earthen and concrete bunkers that could accommodate four missiles, would be far more difficult to destroy than the open platforms of mobile missile sites now scattered along the shores of the strait and Vietnam also said it had turned over its remaining occupation troops to the control of the Cambodian Army. The withdrawal of the military command is part of Vietnam's decision to phase out its direct military role and turn over the conduct of the long and costly war against a three-group guerrilla coalition to the Cambodians.

For Vietnam, which has suffered from half a century of continuous warfare, an end to its most recent and most internally divisive conflict will leave its leaders free to address the country's severe economic and social problems and could help end its international iso-

China Creates a New National Airline

BEIJING (UPI) — China launched Friday what it called a new, independent national airline, Air China, replacing the Civil Aviation Administration of China.

The founding of the airline follows the partial dismantling of CAAC, which will remain as a government agency and retain its power to supervise the industry, oversee aviation regulations and negotiate routes, the airline spokesman, Ye Dongchang said.

Air China will operate 44 domestic and 32 international routes, accounting for 90 percent of international flights and half of all flights inside China, Mr. Ye said. It will compete domestically with five regional irlines also pared from CAAC.

Ex-Uganda Minister Sentenced to Die

KAMPALA, Uganda (AFP) — A former minister of state for national security under former President Milton Obote has been sentenced to death by the High Court in Uganda for kidnapping six civilians, the official New Vision newspaper reported Friday.

Chris Rwakasisi, who headed the secret police, called the National Security Agency, from 1980 to 1985, was convicted Thursday by the High Court in Mbarara, 240 kilometers (150 miles) south of Kampala, the wspaper said.

Louvre Asks Mountaineers To Clean Glass of Pyramid

PARIS - The Louvre museum has signed a contract with four professional mountain climbers to make sure that the latest addition to the city — a 21.6-meter (72-foot) glass pyramid — remains as pristine as it is controversial. The pyramid, designed by the American architect I.M. Pei, dominates the Napoleon courtyard in the Louvre Palace, where critics say it forms a clashing contrast to the surrounding neo-classical facades It is intended to introduce light to three underground levels that will house a main foyer, shops, information desks and snack bars. A similar pyramid links the two buildings of the National Gallery of

The mountaineers rappelled down the pyramid's sides on Thursday, taking a day to clean off a coating of urban grime and pigeon offerings in preparation for a concert that will be held in the courtyard on Sunday.

A museum spokesman said they will return to the task three times month. The inside of the pyramid will be cleaned once a year. The museum's original plan was to install robot cleaners. But this was rejected partly on grounds of cost and partly, the spokesman said, because the cleaners would not have looked aesthetic. The pyramid was inaugurated by President François Mitterrand on March 4, but the complex will not be opened to the public until

Doctors Urged to End AIDS Confidentiality

This is a landmark in the history of medical ethics," Dr. James E. Davis, the new president of the American Medical Association, said Thursday shortly after the policy-making body approved a group of AIDS-related proposals.

"We are saying for the first time that, because of the danger to the public health and the danger to unknowing partners who may be contaminated with this lethal disease, the physician may be required to violate patient confidentiality," Dr. Davis said. "The physician has a responsibility to inform the spouse or known partners. This is more than an option. This is a professional responsibility." Physicians have been torn be-

In growing numbers, doctors and other health workers accidentally exposed to the AIDS virus are taking the drug AZT in hopes of preventing infection, despite possibly severe side effects, health officials said in San Francisco, according to The Associated Press.

The theory is that AZT - now known as zidovudine — if taken early after exposure might prevent the virus from installing itself in the person's genetic material. The toxic drug can cause muscle

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOTTERY Lotto 6/49 is an official lottery operated by the ten Provincial Governments of Canada. It's called Lotto 6/49 because six winning numbers from a total of forty-nine are selected each draw. If the six numbers chosen match the six numbers you are playing, you win the jackpot. In addition to the six regular winning numbers chosen, there's one additional number drawn called six regular winning numbers correct plus the bonus number, you win second prize. Any five, four, or three of the regular winning numbers correct wins you third, fourth, or lifth prize respectively. There's a new draw twice each week (on Wednesday and Saturday), every week of the year. The jackpot is guaranteed to be not less than $1 Million dollars in each draw. And if the jackpot is not won in the current draw, that prize money is carried over and added to the jackpot for the next draw, growing until it's won! YOU PICK YOUR OWN NUMBERS

Besides the enormous prizes to be won, the best thing about Lotto 6/49 is that you pick your own numbers. So, instead of just buying a ticket, you really do play this lottery. Many people feel they have certain personal lucky numbers or numbers that have a special significance to them, such as birthdays or anniversaries. Still others look for statistical patterns in the numbers selected. But whatever method you use, you'll find it much more exciting to play the lottery that lets you enter your own numbers. Bush Makes a Point

"The Cold War is not over," cautions George Bush in a major foreign policy statement. He says he would "seize the opportunity of change" that has been opened up by the new Soviet developments, but he would also prepare the United States for "protracted conflict." That is a sensible straddle, and also probably represents something of an American consensus at this point. It avoids the policy-paralyzing suspi-cion found on the far right, and it avoids the unwarranted conclusion offered by President Reagan (more, fortunately, in his rhetoric than in his policy) and by others that the Kremlin has changed its spots. A healthy skepticism allows the United States to keep a focus on the central matter of the American interest, and steers Americans away from the losing question of whether the United States should "help" Mikhail Gorbachev consolidate his reform.

The prospective Republican presidential nominee is eager to say that the change in Moscow came about as a result of the policies of the administration he has served as vice president -- "in the context of reinvigorated American strength," he said in his address to the World Affairs Council in San Francisco on Wednesday. The likely Democratic nominee, Michael Dukakis, tends to suggest that the change flowed from the Kremlin's improving perception of the Soviet Union's own deep and long-building internal strains. In fact, the truth probably borrows from both perspectives. The Reagan thrust could not have failed to make an impression on a Soviet elite that had been coming more alarmed about Soviet performance and competitiveness for some time.

More than a debating point is involved here. The Bush analysis supports a policy of keeping up a certain pressure in order to contribute to giving the Soviets continued incentive to change their ways. The Duka-kis analysis carries with it the implication of a degree of relaxation.

Mr. Bush likes to take the high road of policy and put evidence of his extensive international experience on display, espe-cially in fields where the Reagan adminis-tration has had some successes. These are all strengths for him, and a reminder that the questions about his involvement in the Iran-contra affair and the Noriega fiasco and his actual role in administration councils are far from defining his whole foreign policy and national security experience. Speeches on foreign policy don't tell you whether either candidate will be any good at executing it, but Mr. Bush made some useful points in his Wednesday statement.

Good Sense Can Win

whom a childhood trip to the dentist didn't mean a cavity count. But now the National Institute of Dental Research reports that half the country's children have no tooth decay whatsoever. The reason: fluoride, once the paranoid's favorite target.

For years, fluoridation of water inflamed substantial parts of the electorate, no matter what the probable health benefits to the public. When a memorable movie madman, the Communist-hating general of 1965's "Dr. Strangelove," described fluoridating water as "a Red conspiracy ... to pollute our precious body fluids," he was speaking for millions. That fluoride is an accepted part of dental care today is a triumph of reason.

So are seat belt laws, which have prevailed over the illogic of people who think they are some kind of threat to personal freedom. Given how much seat belts have

America, it is fair to say that anybody who still opposes such laws (18 states don't have them yet) is simply irrational.

The new American wisdom about smoking is a triumph of reason, too, along with the decreasing hysteria about anti-smoking legislation. Reasonable people know that smoking restrictions are not designed to force a smoker to give up his habit, only to protect a nonsmoker from having to share it.

There are some triumphs of reason yet to come. Millions of Americans are waiting for the day when it is no longer as easy to buy a pistol as it is to buy a radio. Millions are waiting, too, for those who would keep America's children ignorant of contraception to realize that they are sending kids unarmed into a sexual revolution they didn't make. Those days can't come too soon.

Then Came a Drought

For most of the 1980s, the problem of American agriculture was too much of a good thing. Production overran demand, depressing prices. The market was unable to support all the people on the land, and vernment had to step in, at enormous cost. The goal became to extricate the government, but carefully — a gradual reduction of supports and costs to discourage production while stimulating exports until supply and demand were again in the same room.

Progress was being made - and then the drought arrived. Fields and policy both turned to dust. In the space of a month, the problem of supply has shifted from reducing onerous surpluses to ensuring adequate reserves. The problem with prices is suddenly to keep them off the ceiling rather than the floor. Serious people can be heard discussing possibilities — shortages, inflation fireworks to match, even export restrictions to keep supplies at home — that have not been part of the debate for 15 years.

The damage already done to crops will reduce conventional support costs as prices rise. In the long run the price increases could be welcome news to the next administration's budget director as well as to farmers. Although down from the Himalayas of several years ago, spending for income and price supports is still $17 billion a year, three to five times the typical range of the 1970s. In the shorter run (the fiscal year ahead), however, the levels of spending and government involvement are likely to stay about the same. Most of the money saved in conventional supports will properly be spent as drought relief instead.

Livestock herds need to be saved first; some efforts are already under way. The livestock industry is hard to stabilize once disturbed. The more breeding stock are sent to market this year for lack of affordable feed, the smaller meat supplies will be and the higher meat prices a year from now. Congress and the administration need to be careful to limit drought relief, both cash and credit, to farmers whose crops the drought in fact destroys. Those whose crops survive will benefit from the drought; they should not be helped a second time by the government,

For the longer run, the great variable is acreage. America has about 300 million planted acres (about 120 million hectares) this year. Another 25 million are in the conservation reserve, where they should stay, while 50 million are in set-aside programs. The last are the acres that the government has to play with. Instead of tending to keep acres out of production as before, the secretary of agriculture will want to let more in. The trick will be to let in enough to meet demand and maintain reserves and not so much as to rebuild the surpluses from which the system has just been delivered. As ever in agriculture, even in drought and election years, the goal must be to avoid extremes.

The ANC Goes Part of the Way

The African National Congress is reported to be offering liberal constitutional proposals designed to win white support. It is suggested that they represent a major step back from the commitment to a socialist state and the nationalization of South Africa's mines and industries. The promised commitment to a multi-party democracy, a bill of rights, freedom of the press and, crucially, the protection of cultural and linguistic rights is obviously designed to allay legitimate Afrikaner fears about the future of minorities under majority rule.

These guidelines could provide a realistic basis for negotiation with South Africa's present rulers and with other political parties representing that country's fractured communities. At the very least they suggest that the ANC - or an element within it is prepared to do some strategic thinking about the country's future, rather than rely on the belief that one more bomb blast will breach the walls of the white citadel.

The desire of the strategists to assuage white fears will not succeed, however, while others in the organization remain commitied to the tactics of terror. The new proposals will be seen as designed simply to increase the organization's respectability among Western governments. The ANC's return from exile can be assured only by the readiness of white South Africa to welcome it as a legitimate partner in negotiations about the country's future. It is unlikely to extend that invitation while the organization waves a liberal constitution in one hand and brandishes a bomb in the other. - The Times (London).

Europe May Fool the Skeptics

Hardly had the European summiteers shaken the dust of Toronto off their beels when they assembled in Hanover to declare that their progress toward genuine union is now "irreversible." If the fractious Europeans actually eliminate trade barriers, free capital flows and let people work in the country of their choice, they figure to have the global scale and reach to take on the Americans and Japanese. Skeptics could take some comfort in the brush-off that Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher gave to visious of a common European currency and a Bank of Europe modeled after the U.S. Federal Reserve. Yet a warning is in order: American or Japanese hauteur may be not only unbecoming but ill-advised. Forces already in train may sweep aside the provincialisms of the ages and force governments from Athens to London to take steps once deemed politically suicidal.

Asia, Not Europe, Is Where the Future Lies

LOS ANGELES — America celebrates its 212th birthday on Monday. It is time it finally declared independence from Europe and ended a two-century-old fixation with Western civilization.

The fact is that the long era of Europe's predominance in culture and in trade is coming to an end. Without its empires, Europe's share of world trade, 36 percent in 1900, has shrunk to a fraction of that as the economic center of gravity has shifted to the countries which border the Pacific. This shift in economic power has already led to a dramatic realignment of America's economy away from the Atlantic toward the Pacific. In 1960, U.S. trade with Asia was less than half its trade with Europe; by 1995, according to the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness, U.S. trade with Asia could be twice that with Europe.

urban "melting pots" of contemporary America are located not along the Atlantic seaboard but in southern Florida with its links to the Afro-Hispanic Caribbean basin, in the Texas-Mexico border region and in the western states on the Pacific rim.

During the next few decades this new immigrant wave could transform the racial and historical identity of the country. The United States is becoming a "world nation." with ethnic ties to virtually every race and region of the planet. The Population Reference Bureau now projects that by the end of America's third century, most Americans will be descended at least in part from non-Europeans. between East and West, European concerns generally overshadowed all others: Europe was the prime focus of American investment, trade and cultural interests. Obsession with Europe led to a costly commitment of American defense resources. In 1986, for instance, the United States allocated an estimated $134 billion for the conventional defense of Europe, nearly half again as much as the Europe-ans spent on their own defense and three times the American military expenditure in Asia. Perhaps appropriate at one time, such commit-ments are now increasingly out of date. Bereft of their overseas empires, Europeans today are pooling their resources under the umbrella of the European Community. Already the majority of the Community's trade is intra-regional — as well as increasingly with the Soviet-dominated side of the continent. Furthermore, in the Gorbachev era European attitudes toward the Soviet Union itself are changing, sometimes at the expense of the United States.

This process likely will accelerate with the scheduled integration of the EC economies in 1992. A unified European economic block is likely, as The Economist noted in 1986, to take on a distinctly 'mercantilist flavor" that would create obstacles to further American economic interests.

Despite these trends, Eurocentric views continue to proliferate in American political, media and intellectual circles. A mood bordering on hysteria characterizes many of the recent books and media reports about Korean or Japanese economic penetration, but no comparable level of hostility accompanies European trade surpluses, themselves often products of similarly mercantilist trade practices. Such attitudes reflect a growing sentiment, in liberal and conservative camps alike, that Japan, along with other ascendant Asian nations, has replaced the Soviet Union as the prime threat.

The history of America's popular culture — its second largest export after aerospace — reflects the country's adaptability. American literature, after laboring under what Emerson called "our long apprenticeship" to Europe, began to blossom only when writers consciously severed their stylistic links to the mother continent. American music achieved its 20th century ascendancy largely from the influence of predominately Afro-American jazz, blues and, more recently, rock 'n' roll. Hollywood, arguably America's most powerful international influence, was created largely by immigrants and outsiders, most notably Jews from Eastern Europe.

The emergence of a post-European American identity reflects a fundamental reaffirmation of national uniqueness and the heritage of the founders. The leading figures of the early Republic saw its destiny as something greater than a mere national aggrandizement or the westward expansion of European civilization. It is time to recognize that what John Adams called the "grand scheme" has passed through its European epoch and entered a period of closer collaboration with Asia, Latin America and other parts of the world.

it's time to take away the punch bowl. Since World War II, the worst mistakes in American economic policy have occurred when prosperity seemed strongest. Modest inflation was allowed to get out of hand. Fighting it then required high unemployment and prolonged economic stagnation. The lesson: a pre-emptive strike against inflation makes sense. It is a lesson worth heeding now. U.S. economic expansion is in its sixth year. Unemployment is at itslowest level since the late 1970s, but inflation is accelerating.

In the last three months the consumer price index has risen at an annual rate of 5.3 percent, up from 4.4 in 1987. In 1986, big oil-price declines kent the rise to 1.1 percent. In the previous three years it was just below 4 percent.

Wholesale prices, which drive consumer prices, are rising significantly. Prices for consumer products and business machinery have risen at an annual rate of 5.8 percent in the last three months; in 1987 the rise was 2.2 percent. Prices for intermediate goods such as steel, plastics and textiles are rising at an annual rate of about 5.6 percent.

Wage increases are accelerating. Higher labor costs — the biggest expense for most companies could trigger a new wage and price spiral. In 1988, average hourly earn-ings have risen at an annual rate of 4.2 percent compared with 2.7 and 2.0 percent in 1987 and 1986. The drought in the farm belt will worsen inflation. Meat prices will jump most, as producers react to higher grain prices by cutting back.

Higher food prices may raise all con-

there have been three rounds of inflationary policies. The Kennedy and Johnson administrations let inflation go from virtually nothing in 1960 to 5.9 percent by 1970. Under President Nixon, the rate rose to 11 percent in 1974. In the Carter years it peaked at 13.5 percent in 1980. Almost no one wanted to risk a recession to check and wages would abate. But the Fed reflects public opinion, and inflation is not yet taken seriously.

Precisely the opposite: There is bipartisan complacency. Beryl Sprin-

Council of Economic Advisers, sees little risk of higher inflation. Democrat Michael Dukakis barely mentions the subject. Everyone likes good times. In an election year, no one remedies for higher inflation: an eco-without seriously hurting growth. The Kennedy-Johnson economists argued that they could steer the economy, by changes in budget deficits and interest rates, along a path of "full employment." Inflation would stay low because there would not be excessive pressures on wages and prices. When that failed. Richard Nixon imposed wage and price controls, but they merely suppressed inflation and created shortages. Once controls were removed, prices exploded. Jimmy Carter pretended to deal with inflation through voluntary guidelines. What ultimately cut inflation was recession - and the worse the infla-

10.8 percent in the 1981-32 recession. Since spring, the Federal Reserve has reacted to the evidence of higher inflation by raising short-term interest rates about three-quarters of a percentage point. No one knows whether the change will slow the economy suf-ficiently to reverse inflation's rise. If it is not enough, will the Fed do more? Rationalizing delay is easy. What if inflation's increase is only temporary? It's a familiar pattern, Since [1] No one wants to overreact. But delay is dangerous. In present circumstances, an economic slowdown or modest recession might reduce inflation. But if it creeps upwards, getting it down will be a more wrenching process. Have we learned Even now, there are new theories of why inflation can't get out of hand. The 1970s' high inflation, it is said, created automatic defenses by frightening bond investors. At the first signs of higher inflation, they seek to protect themselves against the erosion of their money. They demand higher interest rates on long-term bonds and mortgages. The Fed's influence is mainly on short-term in-terest rates. By this theory, the Fed should simply raise short-term rates when long-term rates increase. Together these interest rate changes will be just enough to control inflation without stifling growth.

It's a clever theory — a little too clever. It embodies a charming faith that "the market" can both predict tion, the worse the recession. Once inflation and prescribe an antidote, inflationary psychology takes hold. Economist Robert Giordano of Gold-company, points out the theory's flaw: The market isn't that farsighted. It represents the collective wisdom of investors, who are fallible and given to fads. Their expectations about inflation are often wrong

Government, not the market, controls inflation. Some price changes oc-cur spontaneously; they result from conditions in specific industries, or from acts of nature, such as a drought. The slave trade was but the effect of a thirst for gold. An Empire of South America had just set a noble example by shutting up one of the markets to which the poor wretches were sent. Yet slavery in Africa was one hun-dred times more dreadful. The number of slaves sold each year amounted to 400,000. To capture these, at least 2,000,000 were massacred.

For Action On Drugs By A. M. Rosenthal

Now a Plan

NEW YORK — Well, at last Along comes a new proposal for drug action that is clear, sensible comprehensive, entirely doable. It is based on solid thinking about what the probability of lems are, makes choices about priorilems are, mases choices about priori-ties, sets goals and outlines organiza-tion. It could finally, finally give the country a known plan and a rational strategy for fighting narcotics. It comes from 15 Democratic senstors working on drug abuse, led by Daniel Moynihan of New York and Sam Nunn of Georgia. The Democratic leadership will try to work with Republican senators to produce a bill backed by members of both parties in Congress. If that happens, if, the result could be one of the most important bipartisan efforts in decades.

The "concept paper" is called "Epi-demic," and it is hucid and literate, sophisticated and even intellectual, if you will excuse the word. It is a plea-sure to read, which may explain in some part my seizure of enthusiasm.

The first assumption is that the drag danger is real. That may seem obvious to most Americans now, but it is an important reply to the substantial number of supporters of drug legaliza-tion who insist that the country is in the midst of a media-created panic,

"We are talking about our future," it says, "and there is a shadow over it. Young people are endangered but nost viciously, virulently, the young people of the mner cities. The violence associated with drug use could drasti-cally alter American society."

The senators propose to spend $3 billion more than the current $4 billion, but they are not just throwing money; they have very specific ideas of how it should be spent They propose to spend 60 percent of the total to try to reduce the de-mand for drugs, through treatment, education, policing and punishment, and 40 percent on fighting to diminish the supply through interdiction and eradication of drug crops abroad. This will be the most controversial part of the proposal. It changes the current budget emphasis on stopping drugs from getting into the country.

The emphasis shifts to fighting drugs at home.

The proposal does not dismiss the need for fighting drug growing and smuggling. But the senators believe that the country gets most value from money spent on fighting the use and peddling of drugs in the United States: They may be wrong, but it is worth the gamble to see if something works better than what is being done now, which is getting nowhere. And if enough money is appropriated, the attempt to fight drugs abroad and at our horders need not be destroyed despite the new emphasis. Here are some other points: Every level of government has to be involved. The federal effort, now scattered among dozens of agencies, shook be pulled together by a cabinet-level director in the president's office, a "drug czar" who would draw up a na-tional drug budget and strategy.

The Department of Justice should be reorganized to create an anti-drug division under a new assistant attorney general. Locally, each community should have a task force involving law enforcement, education and health officials and citizens' representatives. It Washington, a Bureau of State and Local Affairs should help the cities and towns fight their drug battles. On law enforcement, the plan would reduce court and prison logiams that dlow drug peddiers to walk free. There would be more money for courts and prosecutors and 20 new federal judge-ships. U.S. magistrates could take drug cases. Civilian drug prisoners could be housed in military facilities.

Criminal penalties would be increased. Special help would be dispatched to particularly bad drug areas. Federal benefits such as veterans aid would be deprived on first conviction. Five-year funding for education, prevention and treatment instead of the yearhassle. Special attention would be given to areas where use of dirty nee-dles creates high risk of AIDS. There are dozens of other suggestions, important individually but particularly as part of a comprehensive Ebbe Carlsson, a publisher with close links with the governing Social Democratic Party, said on the Swed-ish radio: "I believe Palme was killed because Iran experienced more and more difficulty in buying arms from Sweden after he became prime minister.

Also on Friday, Sweden's attorney general released report into the covert assassination investigation, which set off a political crisis when its existence became known last month, forcing the resignation of Justice Minister Anna-Greta Leijon.

The crisis erupted when Mr. Carlsson's bodyguard was caught trying to smuggle illegal eavesdropping devices into Sweden. Mr. Carlsson said: "The eavesdropping devices were brought in because there were several acute signs that a new, terrorist assassination was threatened in Sweden. In my judgment, this threat still exists." He declined to say who the target or targets of the threatened assassination might be. Mr. Palme was shot by a lone killer on Feb. 28, 1986, while walking home with his wife from a movie theater. The gunman escaped. Mr. Carlsson said he believed the killing was carried out by members of the Kurdish Workers' Party. "But

The inspectors, Jan-Henrik Barrling and Valter Kepo, said they had information that a new assassination plot existed against someone in Sweden. They provided Mr. Carlsson with copies of classified documents, the report said. Mr. Stark's report concluded that the two inspectors had violated state secrecy and recommended that criminal proceedings be instituted against them.

But the report cleared the heads of the secret police and the police force of any wrongdoing. Mr. Stark's report came as a relief to the Social Democrats, who face a tight election battle against an alliance of three center-right parties in September. The report appeared to clear Mrs. Leijon of any criminal wrongdoing, painting her as a person determined to get to the bottom of the murder. It said the decision to smuggle surveillance equipment into Sweden was Mr. Carlsson's alone, taken The so-called Kurdish theory was discredited early against the express advice of the police chief, who told in 1987 after Swedish police arrested a group of Kurds him such action was illegal and could not be tolerated.

ONDON - The latest round of L Impressionist and Modern Master sales in London, in which more than £70 million ($119 million) in pictures and sculptures changed hands, has highlighted the deep changes that the art market is undergoing. Demand is not just soaring, its nature is being increasingly modified by the motivations of players new to the market.

This week, more than ever, names mattered as much as substance, and art history had greater

SOUREN MELIKIAN relevance to prices than the appearance and quality of the work. The ultimate in this line may have been reached at Christie's, which made a killing Monday with a van Gogh bordering on banality and a Monet that is not truly lmpressionist. The foreground is a clumsily empty expanse of sandy ground. This is hardly the Monet one would have expected to set a record for the artist at £3.85 million — even if only for a day. There were comparatively bigger surprises in a lower price range. One is the £1.32 million paid for Renoir's "Le Jeune Garçon au Chat" of around 1868-69. A young boy standing naked is seen from the back coulding a cat and press-ing his face to its head. It is cleverly painted and may have looked a lot better before being damaged and restored. It nonetheless comes within inches of bourgeois kitsch. Christie's must have sighed in relief as it tripled its high estimate.

They did not have the same luck with another pre-Impressionist Re-noir, of decidedly greater interest compared with the naked boy.

Even more astonishing is the record set 10 minutes later for Chagall, when "Paris, La Grande Roue" (1911-12) went to £1.65 million. It is atypical in every respect. At the time of the Chagall retrospective at the Royal Academy in 1985, Susan Compton noted in the catalogue: "This unusual picture follows the motif so closely that it is almost certainly based on a contemporary postcard." Vengeful Architecture A Slick Search for Discomfort and Conflict By Benjamin Forgey Washington Past Service N EW YORK — "Deconstructivist Architecture," the galvanic exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art of 10 projects by seven architects, represents a comeback of modern architecture after two decades of eclipse. It's a visually exciting but somewhat vengeful return — some of this stuff is wonderful and imaginative but almost all of it is slick and intentionally disorienting—and it may be the architectural equiva-lent of Andy Warhol's 15 minutes of fame.

The show's organizers, Philip Johnson and Mark Wigley, were at pains to select projects that have been built, will be built or, conversely, will never be built

If the whopper projects here are the kinds of com-plex objects the architects and well-heeled clients of the future will be turning out, heaven help the already fragmented cities, suburbs, towns and neighborhoods. The intention, says the wall text at the entrance to the show, is to "transform architecture into an agent of instability, disharmony, and insecurity, of discomfort, disorder, and conflict." But, in the guise of radically revising modern architecture, the projects flaunt quite a few of modernism's more anti-social attitudes they are isolated, look-at-me objects, anti-contextual, anti-conventional, anti-historical. The fact that some are poetic and alluring merely masks an underlying poverty of social inspiration or belief.

It is hard to say precisely what comprises "deconstructivist architecture." The word "deconstructivism," coined by the critic Joseph Caovannini, is a conflation of the words "deconstruction," as esotetic French literary and philosophical movement, and "constructivism," the art and architecture of the Russian avant-garde in the years immediately preceding and following the 1917 revolution. So far this odd coupling of concepts and practices is more a marriage of convenience than a coherent the ory. "Just as a literary text (according to this theory) doesn't have a unifying wholeness or fixed meanings, but several asymmetrical and irreconcilable ones," Giovannini has written, "a building can consist of disparate 'texts' and parts that remain distinct and unaligned, without achieving a sense of unity." It other words, the typical deconstructivist building would be asymmetrical, unsettling, contradictory and multilayered in function and meaning.

The big projects do not live up to the rhetoric: They are far too conventional, sleekly overscaled and chillingly anti-human. Rem Koolhaas's proposal for a high-rise apartment building in Rotterdam, for instance, is an overdone modernist slab dressed up for the 1980s. With its alternating angled and flat facades, it's clever and stylish but mean and brutal, too. (For political reasons, apparently, it won't be built.)

The skyscraper designed for Hamburg by the Himmelblan cooperative, with its sharpiy angled planes and skewed geometries, is wonderfully dynamic, but it is just another megastructure. ("Not even AT&T would have enough money to build this one," Johnson

Daniel Libeskind's "City Edge" project is an aston ishing tour de force — situated next to the Berlin Wall, it is a long rectangular tube that rises at an angle from it is a long rectangular tilde that have at an angue from the ground at one end and is supported at the other.
100 feet (30 meters) in the air, by an angled claster of steel columns. The surfaces will be a collage of everyday materials contradicting the monolithic nature of the object, and there will be a Ferris wheel-type elevator among other potentially spellbinding if dis-orienting features. Even so, it is an intrusive, dramatic oddity — it is hard to imagine it being a pleasant place in which to live. Libeskind, like all of the architects here, makes beautiful models and drawings, but practical details - floor plans and so on - are

Peter Eisenman's design for a biological research center in Frankfurt, which may not be built despite the fact that it won the competition for the project, is a set of daring, systematic variations on an esoteric theme. As his building blocks the architect took "the four basic shapes biologists use to describe fundamental biological processes" and subjected them to systematic distortion. The result is visually and intellectually complex but also as cold as ice.

With one exception the more persuasive and poetic of these pieces are small or midscale: Frank Gehry's famous house in Santa Monica, a live-in sculpture combining domesticity with affectionate if startling juxtapositions of odd angles and ordinary, "non-architectural" materials; Himmelblau's explosive, apparitional rooftop addition to a Vienna flat, a striking concatenation of angled planes, straight and curved struts, and sleek materials; Koolhaas's bold steel tower, cantilevered over a Rotterdam canal and the saving grace of his apartment building design; Zaha Hadid's competition-winning design for the Peak, a exclusive club building on a sculpted hilltop above Hong Kong in the form of an incredible "horizontal skyscraper with four long, planar elements superimposed upon one another and the earth at slight but telling angles (this was aborted due to nervousness about Hong Kong's future). The exception is Bernard Tschumi's Parc de La Villette, partially completed in Paris. Alone among these projects does Tschumi's huge park, on the site of the city's 19th-century slaughterhouses, comprehenspecific client - urban recreational forms for the 21st century. This is a built-in mandate, of course, and Tschumi was not the only architect involved (there is a Museum of Science in the park, a lightweight structure, for popular music concerts, a restored grand half exhibitions, and so on). But his overall plan, involving the superimposition of three different systems (a grid, curving lanes and large open surfaces), seems master-ful, and his constructivist-derived steel "follies" (14 of 30 having been built so far) seem, at this distance,

Looking Past Speeches For a Believable Budget

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service EW YORK — The connection between a country's internal and external deficits is clear: If it invests more than it saves and consumes more than it produces -as the United States has been doing—the excess must be covered by an inflow of foreign capital. The greater the internal budget deficit, the lower the savings rate and the greater the dependence on foreign capital.

But there is no consensus on how to reduce or eliminate the structural budget deficit. Vice President George Bush pledges not to raise taxes, while Governor Michael S. Dukakis of Massa-chusetts has left that option Until now Mr. Dukakis has been vague on how he would climinate the budget deficit. He has said it would be irresponsible for him to get too specific before gaining the

One expert says the overall structural deficit will remain at about 4 percent of

Mr. Bush has been more specific. He would balance the budget in the next four or five years by a "flexible freeze" on expenditures, holding the growth of aggregate spending to the rate of inflation while rising revenues gradually eliminate the deficit. "Flexible freeze" means increasing some federal programs, such as education, while cutting others - as yet unspecified.

According to the Bush projections, this plan would reduce the budget deficit, which has been projected by the Congressional Budget Office at $134 billion in 1993 under current policies, to just $16 billion in that year, with savings of $58 billion coming from holding the growth of domestic spending down to the inflation rate and savings of about $60 billion coming from an assumed drop in federal interest payments.

Mr. Bush's advisers insist that their long-term budget-balancing plan is not based on rosy assumptions, noting their use of the CBO's projections, which, they say, are "less optimistic" than those of the Reagan administration. The budget office's projections have the unified budget deficit, including the partly offsetting Social Security surplus, declining from $167 billion in the 1990 fiscal year to $134 billion in 1993.

UT THE staff director of the Senate Budget Committee, Richard N. Brandon, contends that the budget office's projections are based on overly optimistic assumptions: first, that there will be no recession for the next five years; second, that military spending will be held to zero real growth, third, that there will be no extra spending for unanticipated developments, such spending has averaged $15 billion a year for the past 10 years.

Mr. Brandon estimates that under present policies the non-

Social Security deficit will persist at more than $220 billion for the next four years and that, correcting for the optimistic assumptions, the overall structural deficit will remain at about 4 percent of the gross national product.

The Bush assumption that about $60 billion of the budget deficit in 1993 will be eliminated by the drop in interest payments, as a result of the financial markets' acceptance of the credibility of his budget-balancing plan, raise doubts. For one thing, the persistence of internal and external deficits in the next few years will swell the volume of federal debt on which interest

With the economy steadily growing, efforts to keep the dollar stable are likely to keep interest rates high or raise them higher. But if the dollar does fall further to keep the trade deficit shrinking, financial markets would ward pressure on interest rates.

The markets, and the rest of the country, are still looking for a creditable plan to balance the budget - from both candidates.

Spending for new residential construction was down 1 percent in May from April, to a seasonally djusted annual $193.4 billion. The bulk of the drop came in spending for new single-family houses. Spending for new apartment buildings rose slightly.

The dip in single-family housing construction mirrors other reports this month showing that a private house in the suburbs is both rising in price and becoming less popular with builders and buyers.

Spending for nonresidential projects rose 4.3 percent in May to a seasonally adjusted annual $98.9 billion, led by a 0.8 percent increase in spending on new offices and industrial projects, the report said. Factory construction rose 7.7

ed a hectic week Friday buoyant but off its highs, after the Bank of Japan joined the Bundesbank in trying to stop a three-week surge in its value.

The dollar still closed at its highest level against the yen this year in Europe, and extended that gain in New York trading before retreating slightly. Many dealers expect it to rise further next week.

"Unless the Bank of Japan interan analyst at Barclays Bank, "the market will continue to push the dollar against the line of least resistance, the yen."

For the first time this week, after other central banks had tried with only moderate success to blunt the dollar's rise, the Bank of Japan was seen intervening in Singapore; selling dollars for Deutsche marks, but not for yen. The amounts involved. $30 million to $50 million, were considered modest, dealers said.

His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej (above) has ruled, through innumerable governmental changes, for over 42 years.

New Milestones Reached For King and Country

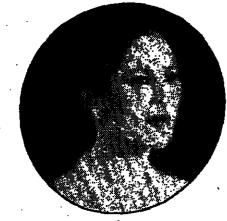

Bhumibol Adulyadej — Thailand's vastly popular and nation-binding king -- today becomes the longest reigning monarch in his country's 700-year history.

perhaps no other 20th-century blueblood could elicit. But longevity itself is hardly the king's out-standing attribute. During his 42 years, 23 days on the throne, King Bhumibol has sometimes stilled, generally risen above, turbulent events to become, in the words of a British television profile, "the soul of a nation."

Through nine coups d'etat, ten constitutions and innumerable government changes, the king has per-sonified stability, reason and tradition. And as crowns toppled amidst violence in neighboring Indochina, he grappled with the root cause of revolution: poverty and social injus-thrust upon the throne in 1946. Till then he had shown a penchant for fast cars and hot jazz. There were predictions he would become a puppet of the squabbling, military strongmen who took turns running the country.

Instead Bhumibol moved to revitalize the constitutional monarchy. "So this reign is perhaps characterized by going step by step. Evolu-tion," he told an American journalist years later. Accompanied by his stunning wife, Queen Sirikit, the king gained self-confidence, diplomatic savvy and powerful friends for the country on extensive trips to Europe,

The milestone is being celebrated North America and other Asian by his countrymen with a fervor countries in the 1960s. The slim, boyish-looking king impressed, the queen charmed the likes of Charles de Gaulle and Dwight D. Eisen-

> At home, Bhumibol took his constitutional prerogatives. Unsmiling, meticulous, iconic, he presided over the innumerable religious and royal ceremonies that are vital to Thai self-perception. And, perhaps most importantly, he and his family built up a mass following in the rural, often poor, heartland.

> "We decided (in the late 1950s) that Thailand was too poor to support a conventional monarchy like those of Europe. The king decided that we must be able to help the government solve the people's prob-lems," Queen Sirikit has said.

The king proceeded to initiate more than 1,000 rural development projects, including a pioneering and largely successful effort to wean hilltribes away from growing opium in favor of other cash crops. He hiked into remote hill villages and squatted in the dust with lowland rice farmers, settling disputes, per-sonally designing small-scale dams and prodding ineffective government officials.

Despite immense wealth passed down by his ancestors, opulent palaces in the Thai capital and talents aplenty (he is an artist, linguist, photographer, inventor, international class sailor and composer once featured on Broadway), the king queen and some of their four children spend up to nine months of each year in the countryside. They fan out almost daily to oversee leper colonies, one-room schools, village fertilizer "banks" and weaving cooperatives for impoverished

The king's relationship with the country's hilltribe minority is illustrative. These dwellers of northern Thailand were traditionally out of sight, out of mind as far as government officials were concerned. Only opium smugglers, Chinese bandits and a few Christian missionaries ventured into this slice of the socalled "Golden Triangle."

From Rice to Riches: The Rise of the Bangkok Bank

Son of a southern Chinese clerk, Chin Sophonpanich began his working life cooking noodles and hauling rice bags. When he died in January this year at the age of 77, his business empire included Southeast Asia's largest bank and some 150 other companies.

The slight, unassuming immigrant was among a group of Sino-Thais who rose from literal rags to stag-gering riches in true overseas Chinese entrepreneurial style.

The centerpiece of Mr. Chin's empire, Bangkok Bank, is often said to be Thailand's most powerful institution - after the monarchy, army and government bureaucracy.

Started in a Chinatown shop house in 1944, the bank bestrides Thailand's financial world as few private institutions do anywhere in the world.

It extends 30 percent of the loans; takes in more than 25 percent of deposits, and finances 30-40 percent of the country's exports - currently a prime propellant of the Thai economy.

While its domestic position is unassailable, the bank's 301 billion baht ($12 billion) in assets also rank it 13th largest in Asia and 237th worldwide. Assets increased by 12.3 percent last year and a similar growth is predicted for

The bank's executive chairman, Amnuay Viravan, points out that Mr. Chin's death has had little effect on operations as he retired five years earlier. Until his retirement, it was said,

Mr. Chin knew more about the details of bank operations than any of his more than 16,000 employees. "The Chin family still has effective control," Mr. Amnuay said. "But we all realize a company of this size cannot be run by any one man or family if you expect it to be competitive and efficient." The family controls about 35 percent of the shares and three sons hold top positions, but more outside professionals are occupying executive suites in the bank's 33-story head-quarters on Bangkok's "Wall treet," Silom Road.

Mr. Amnuay foresees Bangkok Bank shifting from a largely "short-term credit institution" to long-term financing, consortium activities and battles with other world giants.

We are diversifying our services. We have to, because in the future our business will be more internationalized," he says.

Mr. Amnuay and other bank executives like to portray, with considerable justification, Bangkok Bank as a partner with the government in formulating and helping implement key economic policies. In earlier days critics charged that Bangkok Bank manipulated political power for its own profit.

However it fares in its new ventures, it is unlikely the bank will expand as dramatically as it did under Mr. Chin. There are far more players in the Thai economy now, and more government regulation of the super-rich.

Economy Surges Forward

On Third Economic Wave

Bolstered by a surge in exports, foreign investment and tourism, Thailand is riding what analysts call Asia's third economic wave, following in the wake of Japan and the continent's "Four Tigers."

dustrialized Nations — or NICS in the 1990s.

Senior banker and government adviser Olarn Chaipravat talks about the start of a "golden age," and while this may smack of hyper-bole, even the biggest optimists have been underestimating Thailand's economic growth indicators, including the 7 percent GNP expansion last year.

Concrete evidence of boom times is etched on the Bangkok skyline: an ever-thicker phalanx of new company headquarters, five-star hotels and condominiums. Foreign tourists—a record 3.5 million came in 1987 — flock to temples and palaces in the quieter, historic quarters of the capital. In the countryside, the traditional economic bedrock, farmers are moving from staples to higher value crops — fancy vegetables, fruits, farmed shrimp — while still keeping Thailand the world's top rice exporter. The country also ranks fifth worldwide in overall food exports. In provincial hubs and on the outskirts of Bangkok, new industrial estates and individual manufacturing enterprises are attracting both local and foreign investment. Many of them have come in search of highly skilled but relatively cheap labor; Thailand's wage rates are roughly one-fifteenth of Japan's and a sixth of Taiwan's.

Tourism Heading For A Spectacular Year

Tourism-inspiring anniversaries, facts and figures have characterized the 1980s in Thailand.

The ruling Chakri dynasty and the kingdom's capital city both turned two hundred in 1982. King Bhumibol Adulyadej celebrated his 60th birthday (the completion of the fifth twelve-year cycle is a momentous event for every Thai) last December and today ceremonies throughout the country begin honoring the king as the longest-reigning monarch in

Thai history. Dates and milestones provide a good excuse for festivities. This week's commemorations, for example, include tonight's official opening of the Sukhothai Historical Park, which encompasses the grounds of the striking 13th century capital of Thailand. Thais love statistics. Most are aware that the Tum Nak Thai restaurant earned a berth in this year's 'Guinness Book of Records" as the world's largest restaurant and that

The Tourism Authority of Thailand (TAT) cannily exploits these dates, events and figures to encourage tourists to flock to Thailand.

Prompted by the king's 60th birthday, and extended through last month, 1987's "Visit Thailand Year" helped attract 3.5 million tourists (an increase of 23.5 percent over 1986) who spent $1.9 million (an increase of 32 percent over 1986). Although officials had ex-

Airline Merger Aims To Boost Tourist Trade

The smiling air hostess greeted the passengers boarding a Thai Airways International flight from Seoul to Bangkok: "Sawatdee," she said. "Welcome to Thailand."

"The smile, service, Thai food and ies serviced by Thai, to Chiang Mai, orchids combine to create an excep-tional airline even by Asia's highquality standards," said an American banker who had chosen to fly from Seoul to London via Bangkok simply because he was hooked on Thai. "Today it is one of the best airlines in the world and the new Bangkok airport makes travel to, from and through Thailand increasingly simple."

Like the air hostess, the departure hall at Bangkok's International Airport is typically Thai. A stunning gilded teak wood pavilion sells arts and crafts while another outlet provides fresh orchids. The first-class departure lounge has marble bathrooms, private offices and enough amenities, said the American banker, to keep him happily occupied during the layover.

About 50 percent of all visitors to Thailand arrive on Thai Airways International, which recorded a 25 percent increase in passenger traffic last year.

"Our challenge is to continue to improve our image as a full-service airline," said Pratin Buranabunpot, the director of Thai's market planning and development department. "The latest objective is to create an interlinked international and domestic network with increased frequency and capacity to different

This goal was partially accomplished last April when Thai Airways International merged with Thai Airways.

Tourists and travel agencies are now able to use the homogenous carrier to arrange both international and domestic flights as well as package tours through Thai's Royal Or-chid Holidays. The integration of resevations and flight operations, for example, simplifies the booking of both tickets and seats. Reservations can be made on a flight from Paris, or 42 other international citor 21 other domestic destinations handled by the airline, in a single operation.

"The merger boosts Thai tourism because there are coordinated connections to domestic destinations beyond Bangkok and expanded package tours," explained Dharmnoon Prachuabmoh, governor of the Tourism Authority of Thailand, who noted that the airline may have some interesting competition in the 1990s with the implementation of an Orient Express-like train service from Chiang Mai to Singapore.

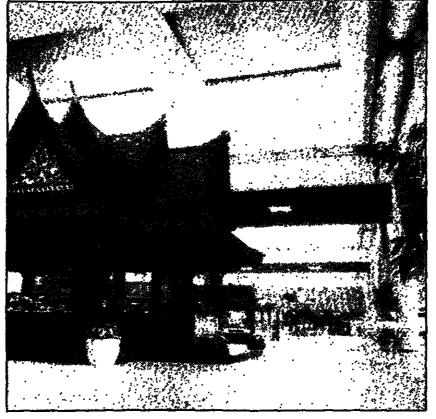

The government-controlled carrier is also purchasing additional aircraft and expects its fleet to increase to 50 aircraft by 1992. It has added five new international destinations — Auckland, Cairns, Madrid, Toronto and Vienna — and will gradually commence direct international flights to different destinations within Thailand.

"We will also continue to boost the number of its non-stop flights to Europe and promote the use of the Bangkok airport as a hub for other international carriers to encourage more stopovers and increase domestic travel," explained Pratin Buran-

Thai Airways International, which has 13,000 employees, currently operates at about 71 percent capacity and has recorded profits every year since 1965. Eighty-eight percent of its revenue is derived from international operations (including cargo and mail transport), 6 percent from domestic flights and the remainder from other operations such as the downtown duty-

Profits during the first quarter of 1988 almost equaled that for the last entire fiscal year and observers agree that Thai's greatest challenge will be to improve its already reputable level of service.

Then, in the early 1960s, the king began taking hikes into their remote homelands, noting rampant disease, meager diets and a crippling dependence on opium. An initial royal project on pig breeding was followed by general agricutural development, education and step-by-step opium replacement. Government officials and foreign aid donors were quick to follow his lead, and consequently the hilltribes' living standards have improved markedly over the past decade.

Links such as these, which Bhu-mibol has forged with millions of his subjects, makes his position virtually invulnerable. By 1973, for example, it took only a few words from him to end a bloody, studentled uprising against a dictatorial trio. As street violence mounted, he allowed unarmed demonstrators to enter the palace and ordered his guards to remove the ammunition clips from their rifles. The troika

In 1981, during Thailand's last major political crisis, a coup attempt by dissident multary officers quickly crumbled after the king and members of his family left Bangkok

with Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda, the constitutionally elected leader. The king has only wielded such overt power during a few periods of national crisis, trying to maintain an admittedly difficult impartiality.' "A constitutional monarch must become a living symbol of the country," he has said of his job. "He must change with the country but, at the same time, he must keep the spirit of the country." While some in academic circles debate the merits of a 20th century monarchy, criticism of the king himself is almost non-existent, even in private conversations.

Instead much of the recent talk about King Bhumibol has focused on possible abdication, something which palace officials deny. Those close to the throne say the 60-yearold king still has unfinished business. With external threats now minimal, living standards improving and the country probably as politically stable as it has ever been in modern times, Bhumibol may be looking with some concern at the price the country is paying for rapid economic and social change.

Even while Thai communist insurgents were posing a serious threat, he told a foreign journalist: "The publicized danger is communism. But the greed of our own people is more dangerous."

Unique Venture Backed By Public and Private Sector

By the end of this year, Thailand's first planned industrial town expects to have all its lots booked by Taiwanese, Japanese, American and European companies hoping to cash in on the country's manufacturing drive.

Widely regarded as a prototype, Bangpoo Industrial Estate is uniquely - a government-private sector enterprise. As such, it can smooth a client's passage through often complex bureaucratic procedures—and speed up the granting of privileges due.

Another attraction is location: mid-way between downtown Bangkok and the Eastern Seaboard project, the country's ambitious industrial and cargo port scheme. Both areas are within an hour's drive of Bangpoo.

Lots on the self-contained, 4,000acre (1,600-hectare) estate have al-ready been purchased by more than 150 companies, including ICI, Dupont, BASF, Delta Electric and Bangkok Container Industries. Chemicals, leatherware, textiles and food canning predominate.

Management provides utilities, waste water treatment, security and basic infrastruture, and is constructing residential areas, a school, hospital and golf course. Approved earlier this year for inclusion in the estate is an export processing zone

General Manager Paiboon Sum-ranputi says land sales totaled 511 million baht ($20.4 million) last year, with the price set at about $52,000 an acre. With equivalent sales this year, the remaining 30 percent of land currently vacant should be taken by the end of 1988.

To date, 60 percent of Bangpoo's clients have been Taiwanese companies, 30 percent Japanese, and the remainder American, West Europe-

Though there were few takers during the estate's first ten years, they came flocking in as the Thai economy began its surge in early 1987. "We were in line with the government's policy to net foreign investment," says the general man-

A markedly improved political situation also appears to have helped boost outside investment. Talk about Thailand as "the next domino" that would fall to communists in neighboring Indochina is virtually non-existent. And domestically, Prem Tinsulanonda has become the longest-serving prime minister in modern Thai history, his eight-year tenure a sharp contrast to earlier coups d'état and attempted power grabs.

The Japanese are the leading investors, accounting for some 70 per-cent of outside investment capital approved by the government's Board of Investment last year. But there is also substantial interest from Americans, Western Europeans and the "Four Ligers" — Hon Kong, Singapore, South Korea and particularly Taiwan.

Bangkok. Buddhist tranquility and exceptional tourist attractions are only part of a visit to Thailand.

Shopping is a particularly profit-able and pleasant pastime. Singa-pore or Hong Kong are better for electronics and high-tech items, but Thailand is a bargain for the many items detailed in the Official Shopping Guide published, along with recommended shops, by the TAT. It is rare to see a tourist not having a suit or silk ensemble fitted at one of the many tailors while simultaneously debating the value of a particular sculpture at the shop next

Thai food, of course, also has a hot reputation. There are hundreds of good restaurants, including a vast number of vegetarian eateries, throughout the country. But if you feel lonely join the other 2,999 diners at Turn Nak Thai (131 Rachadapisek, Tel: 277-8833), which opened in 1985 on ten acres and thus earning it the title of the world's largest restaurant. The tables are located under well-lit openair pavilions and amidst fishstocked ponds. Some of the 1,000 employees take orders and serve on roller skates and about 30 percent of the guests are tourists.

"Visit Thailand Year' and the Guinness Book of Records helped us attract an increasing number of foreigners," explained Varavuth Salitul, assistant service manager. "If things keep growing we may have to become even bigger."
That would give Thais another statistic to tout, but the country plans to do more than rest on its current numerical laurels. A group representing a number of national businesses and organizations has been formed to help the TAT determine its future orientations.

"We want visitors to stay longer and consume the whole panorama that is Thailand," explained Dharmnoon Prachuabmoh, noting that special discounts on hotel rooms and tours will enable tourists bound for or returning from the Seoul Olympics to visit Thailand for little extra cost. "Our challenge is to creatively enlarge the range of tourist activities while maintaining the level of service."

—J.S-M.

"We'd like nothing better than to diversify the sources of foreign investment," says Bangkok Bank executive chairman Amnuay Viravan. There is an optimum point beyond which you don't want your country to be influenced by an outside econ-

Thai economists say the country's current takeoff is the result of more than two decades of conscious effort converging with some fortunate timing.

In contrast to a longish list of developing nations, the Thai government subscribed to conservative fiscal management and eyed budgetary and trade deficits with proper alarm. It pursued energy alterna-tives, including offshore natural gas, to cut hefty oil import bills. And it encouraged diversification from basic agriculture — now contributing less than half the GNP - to manufacturing, which has been expanding at an annual rate of about 10 private sector leaders, the domestic market mentality shifted toward export orientation.

Then came the lucky breaks: a drop in oil prices, lower interest rates and the decline of the U.S. dollar. On the Asian scene, firstwave industrial power Japan and the second-wave "Tigers" were looking to relocate their industries. casting about for cheaper labor. land and raw materials.

"Everything came into place and all of a sudden we found we could compete on the world markets," said Mr. Amnuay, an early promoter of the export drive. After several sluggish years, the economy began to move into high gear in early 1985, registering better growth rates than its five partners in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN): Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Brunei and the Philippines.

By 1987, export earnings had risen 30 percent over the previous year. and were still moving at the same level for the first four months of 1988. Textiles, canned food, gems and jewelry, leatherware, plastic products and integrated circuits have been added to traditional ex-

Thailand also plans to play a pivotal role in the "Visit ASEAN (Association of South East Asian Nations) Year" scheduled for 1992 when the country will coincidentally be celebrating the queen's sixtieth birthday.

"All these events combine to create a long-term coordinated program to attract a wide variety of tourists while simultaneously promoting the country's excellent service and facilities," explained Dharmnoon Prachuabmoh, the governor of the TAT.

Can the tourism infrastructure cope with the rapid growth?

It looks like it. The new Bangkok airport makes international connections a breeze and the country has enough diverse domestic destinations to accommodate the tastes of tourists seeking variety - from calm Buddhist temples and virginal jungle to exciting nightlife and beckoning beaches — and other spices of life.

There may be an occasional shortage of hotel rooms in Bangkok. which continues to mature as a destination for convention and business tourism, but that is understandable in a city with reasonably priced hotels which deservedly have the reputation of providing the best service in the world.

Naturally Bangkok has some big-city problems which do not fail to strike a visitor. Although authorities are discussing rapid transit systems and throughways, the streets are a sprawl of pollution and noise creat-ed by trucks, car, tuktuks (motor-ized three-wheelers) and motorcy-

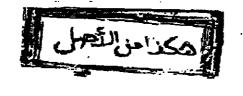

But this noisy and negative first impression actually has a positive impact. The frenzy makes a tourist's first relaxing moment — whether it is around the hotel pool, a visit to the Reclining Buddha, or full treatment (which ranges from ear cleaning and head massage to pedicure and foot massage) at the many renowned Thai barbershops --- seem even more peaceful than it would in a place of pastoral calm.

"WE WILL REIGN WITH RIGHTEOUSNESS, FOR THE BENEFIT AND HAPPINESS.

OF THE SIAMESE PEOPLE."

This solemn promise, the coronation pledge of Thai Kings throughout history, was affirmed by His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej on being crowned Rama IX, ninth sovereign of Thailand's Royal House of Chakri. On that day,

King Bhumibol Adulyadej became heir to the aspirations and the cares of the Thai people. It was indeed a heavy responsibility for the young monarch, who had succeeded to the throne on 2nd July, 1946 at the age of only eighteen.

His Royal forebears of the Chakri dynasty by their diligence and farsightedness secured both the independence and cultural integrity of the Thai nation. Such great figures as King Mongkut

(Rama IV) and King Chulalongkorn (Rama V) are today still honoured for the prosperity their reigns brought to the people of the Kingdom, and for the crucial part they played in the emergence of modern Thailand.

The hopes and prayers of the Thai nation have been answered in the forty-two years since His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej ascended to the throne. His Majesty's devotion to his people has been tireless. He has travelled the length and breadth of his Kingdom, personally initiating many projects, both large and small, to further the happiness and well-being of all his subjects. No village is too remote, no task too arduous. Thanks to his keen intellect and caring nature, he has developed a deep understanding of the daily lives of the many and diverse peoples who together make up the Kingdom of Thailand.

On July 2nd 1988, His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej becomes the longest-reigning monarch in the entire history of the Thai nation. Throughout the country, his people rejoice, not merely in celebration of this Royal milestone, but also with gratitude and pride. For the reign of King Bhumibol Adulyadej has been an outstanding period of achievement and advancement for the Thai nation. On this happy occasion, the people of Thailand salute

Soviet Gold Sales Said To Be at Normal Levels, Despite Market Rumors

ZURICH - Soviet gold sales seem to be running at normal levels despite that Moscow has been a major seller in recent weeks, dealers in Europe and Asia say. The price of gold has fallen by around $30 an ounce since the first week of June to Friday's London afternoon fix of $436.85. It was firmer Friday after a slightly higher opening in New

Some dealers have attributed the drop in price to discreet but heavy selling by the Soviet Union. But a poll of gold traders and analysts in Europe and Asia showed that most thought Soviet trading was still routine. "There is no evidence that Soviet sales have been any greater than normal," said George Milling-Stanley, an analyst at Consolidated Gold Fields PLC in London. Hans-Jürg Pletscher, a precious-metals spe cialist at Union Bank of Switzerland in Zurich. said the Soviet Union and other producers had recently been selling when gold was above $450. but producer sales had since tailed off.

"It's always difficult to say what their net sales are as they're in the market as both sellers and buyers." he said.

A spokesman for Moscow's Bank for Foreign Economic Affairs in Zurich, asked earlier this week whether the Soviet Union was selling large quantities of gold here, said: "I have not seen

Nickel Prices Set To Rise Steeply

Agence France-Presse LONDON — Nickel consumption is expected to hit a record level this year, leading to a near tripling in average prices. Shearson Lehman Hutton says in its annual review of the nickel industry.

Western world nickel consumption is forecast at a high of 660,000 metric tons in 1988, up from the record set the previous year with 630,000 tons, the analysts said.

The higher consumption will result in a market deficit of 36,000 metric tons this year, taking average prices up to $6.15 a pound from $2.21 last year, despite an increased supply shortfall of 40,000 metric tons.

Shearson Lehman said consumption would fall back to 630,000 metric tons in 1989, resulting in a supply surplus of 22,000 metric tons and an average price of $4,25 a pound.

In addition to strong demand from the aerospace industry, consumption continues to be sustained by the stainless steel industry, where production surpassed 9 million metric tons for the first time last year.

Shearson forecast stainless steel output would rise by about 7 percent this year to 9.9 million metric tons, before dropping by the end of 1989 as consumers reduce inventories against a background of uncertain economic activity.

France to Help Soviets Phase Out Nuclear Sites

PARIS - Framatome, the French state-owned nuclear group, has signed a preliminary agreement to help the Soviet Union dismantle its outmoded nuclear power plants. Framatome said Friday.

No details were available on either the duration of the program or on the sites involved.

Texas Air Drops Plan to Sell Off Eastern Shuttle

NEW YORK — Texas Air Corp on Friday dropped union-opposed plans to sell the profitable Northeast shuttle operated by its Eastern Airlines unit to another subsidiary.

Eastern, whose shuttle serves the busy Boston-New York-Washington corridor, gave no reason for its announcement, but analysts said was a peace gesture to Eastern's unions. The saic of the shuttle routes to the newly created Texas Air subsidiary would have brought the ailing Eastern $225 million, company officials have said.

Union leaders at Eastern Air. sines welcomed Texas Air's decision. "It could be viewed as a positive step in labor relations at Eastern," said Nancy Currier, vice president of the union that represents Eastern's flight attendants.

Texas Air is the largest U.S. airline holding company. Its chairman Frank A. Lorenzo, whose efforts to slash labor costs at Eastern have been unsuccessful, has recently been taking a softer tone with the unions. He also has been under the unions. He also has been under the pressure of a federal probe into safety at Texas Air's Eastern and Continental subsidiaries, although the two carriers were given a clean bill of health.

Eastern's unions had sued to block the shuttle sale. The unions said the deal violated their constant tracts and was designed to pressure them into accepting wage cuts.

The terms, agreed on Thursday, were part of a huge document that would eventually permit the pri-vate trusts of William Herbert Hunt, Nelson Bunker Hunt and Lamar Hunt to emerge from prolection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy

"This is a major agreement," said a lawyer for the banks, who asked not to be named. The outlines of the settlement were reached late last year, but details took months to negotiate, in part because of the oil service company's size. Penrod is considered the world's largest drilling company, with 54 offshore rigs and 55 land

Also, William Herbert Hunt's future role at Penrod was a contenflous issue, the lawver said. In the end, Mr. Hunt, who is 59 and has controlled Penrod as its managing agreed to yield that position indefi-nitely, although he house major role in Penrod's operations, a Hunt spokesman, Tom Whitaker,

Penrod, with 2,300 employees, is to be run by trustees appointed jointly by representatives of the banks and the Hunt brothers. "It is in the best interests of the bank creditors and the trustees to operate Penrod" at peak efficiency, Mr. Whitaker said. "They will be able to agree" on Penrod's new top executives, he asserted.

The plan, filed late on Thursday afternoon with Judge Harold Abramson of the Federal Bankruptcy Court in Dallas, was apoved by a group of banks headed by Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. of New York. The banks sued the Hunts in 1986 to recover $777 million in overdue loans to Penrod. Its sister company, Placid Oil Co., owed another $800 million, and is also reorganizing under Chapter

The Hunts also agreed to drop what many legal scholars considered an audacious courtroom challenge to the banks. The Hunts had asked for $14 billion in damages for what they asserted was the banks' deception and fraud in efforts to "dismantle" and "ultimately destroy" Penrod and Placid Oil.

The settlement reached on Thursday covers only the Penrod debts. A similar plan that would give the banks a major stake in "It's just a slow process," he said. A statement released by Hunt Expected to Match '87 Loss of the U.S. Commerce Department's office of computers and business equipment, in describing the feeling of U.S. computer makers toward Japanese government procurement practices.

Despite Pact, Japan Ignores American Supercomputers

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TOKYO — The Japanese gov-

He said the Japanese government had purchased three Japanese-made supercomputers since the agreement. Japanese companies may have given discounts up to 80 percent of U.S. prices, Mr. McPhee said.

Mr. McPhee, who is leading a mission of six U.S. supercomputer and mini-supercomputer makers to Japan, said U.S. firms held an 80 to 85 percent share of the world supercomputer market, and were doing badly only in Japan.

"When you see virtually no sales here and such growth in the rest of the world, then something is out of line," Mr. McPhee said.

A bilateral agreement to promote, though not guarantee, Japanese public-sector purchases of U.S. supercomputers went into effect in August after the United States complained that the Japa-

Systems Corp. They came to Japan to familiarize potential Japanese clients with their technology and to study possible joint marketing of products with Japanese partners, said Lee Adamson, Prime Computer's senior manager for engineering and scientific sales support.

"We're having tremendous interest with prospects for accounts," Mr. Adamson said. "My experience on this mission with prospects and interest of our subsidiary in Japan for the mini-supercomputer market has been very good, and we expect some major sales in the Japanese market." The six U.S. firms represent some of the best technology currently available in U.S. industry. Mr. McPhee said. Of the 58 supercomputers installed in Japan, 13 are U.S.-made, according to the Commerce Department.

Sales to the private sector were satisfactory, the Commerce Department official said. Cray Reearch Inc., which has sold 12 machines so far, has most of Japan's automakers as customers.

The Japanese may be narrowing the U.S. technological lead, Mr. McPhee said. Exports by Fujitsu, NFC and Hitachi to Europe, the United States and Australia have been increasing, said the Commerce Department official.

In software, the United States still has a comfortable advantage,

"We need to adjust some of our ways of thinking," said Richard Kachelmeyer, of ETA Systems, which had to pay a penalty this year for delivering a computer late. ETA promised to deliver a $20.7 million computer to the Tokyo Institute of Technology in March, but had to postpone it until May.

"Wartsila has always managed to avoid the most popular areas, whether it was tankers or offshoreoil vessels," observed Jeffrey Friedman, president of Dreyfus Growth Opportunity Fund in New York, a $575 million mutual fund that holds $10.8 million worth of Wartdia chares.

The company strategy for survival, most analysts say, has been sharpened by the Finnish government. Unlike many European nations. Finland has refused to grant its shipbuilding industry any direct subsidies, forcing Wartsila to hone its marketing and to develop proprietary design-and-production

In fact, its tourist submarine will spend a lot of time outside Finland, with only June through August at home. For September and October, the vessel will dive outside Stockholm. It will go south for the rest of the year, and the Finnish company is negotiating with several concerns in the Mediterranean.

PARIS - An agreement between American Airlines and British Airways gives the U.S. carrier an important opportunity to compete in the multibillion-dollar European market for computer reservations systems, industry experts say.

The companies reached a settlement earlier this week, by which British Airways agreed to allow its tickets to be machine-issued through the Sabre reservations system operating by American Airlines.

In exchange, American Airlines agreed to change the way it displays British Airways hights to give them greater prominence on the computer screens that travel agents use to select and reserve flights.

As a result of the agreement, American Airlines has withdrawn litigation in England's High Court as well as complaints before the European Community and the U.S. Department of Transportation. American Airlines had alleged that the denial of ticketing rights was an unfair trade restriction in favor of Travicom. British Airways' own reservations system

Michael A. Buckman, president of Sabre, said recently that if a computerized reservations system could not perform the basic task of issuing the tickets of the national flag carrier, it was of little use to the travel agent.

Geoffrey Lipman, executive director of the and other services.

International Foundation of Airline Passenger Associations in Geneva, said: "Our view is that this settlement is a very positive move for the flying public. It is going to allow competition inside the United Kingdom, which is an important market, but more importantly, it signals a beachhead for the same kind of deals to be made in Europe?

The main European airlines are racing to establish two competing global reservations systems, known as Galileo and Amadeus, which are expected to handle $1 billion worth of business by 1992, when internal trade barriers in the European Community are scheduled to come down.

Galileo and Amadeus, which will eventually replace the limited systems operated by each of the European airlines, are due to start operations next year, giving American Airlines a sales opportunity in Europe.

American Airlines have to move fast to get their market presence before these other guys come in with their all-singing, all-dancing systems," said Kevin Kealy, deputy secretary of the European Civil Aviation Conference in Par-

The Sabre system is superior to anything that European travel agents have at present, because of the quantity of information it provides and the facility to make global bookings not only for aircraft seats but also for hotels, rental cars

WHEN IT COMES

But because of the restriction on ticketing American Airlines has managed to sell the system to only about 250 of the more than 30,000 travel agents in Europe. Sabre makes its earnings by charging a commission for every booking made on the system,

Industry experts said that if Sabre did manage to enlarge its presence in Europe, it would have to make substantial changes in the way it displays information on the computer screens in order to meet proposed European Community legislation. The EC is expected to adopt a code of conduct issued recently by the European Civil Aviation Conference.

The code is aimed at eliminating bias or misinformation from the computer displays and lays down criteria for the order in which flights are displayed on the screens -- an economically important consideration, because travel agents make most bookings from the first few flights listed.

Under the code, direct nonstop flights must be listed ahead of connecting flights, which in turn must be listed by reference to length of iourney time.

The code also requires that passengers must be informed about connections where two separate flights have the same number, or where two airlines share the same routing code. Such flights show up on U.S. screens as direct flights, and therefore get priority.

Dollar Signs From Tokyo

LONDON - The Japanese joined the West Germans on Friday in trying to stop a three-week surge in the dollar, but Tokyo said it would not follow the Bundesbank's lead in raising interest rates. Dealers in Singapore said the Bank of Japan sold a modest $30 million to $50 million for Deutsche marks in the currency market there, through a Japanese bank. "The Japanese central bank sold dollars at around 1.8225 DM in the afternoon," a Singapore dealer said. But this was said to be a token and no Japanese intervention to support the yen was detected However, the hint that the Japanese were moving up alongside the Bundesbank, which, with other European central banks, has tried to brake the dollar all week, made markets cautious. The Bundesbank announced a half-point increase in its discount rate Thursday, triggering rate increases elsewhere in Europe. In Tokyo on Friday, Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa said Japan would not follow West Germany's move. He said he had no "new ideas" on monetary policy because the fundamentals of the Japanese economy were "very good."

However, a Bank of Japan official was quoted by Japan's Kyodo news service as saying that the current mood prevailing in the currency market "is undesirable." The agency quoted the official as saying that speculators had sold the yen against the dollar expecting that the central bank would not intervene and that this mood was undesirable. Next week something must be done, he said, without saying under what conditions.

A Baker Reminder to the Cabinet

Secretary Warns Others Against Comments on Dollar

By Hobart Rowen

. Vashington Past Service WASHINGTON — Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d warned other Reagan cabinet officials last week that because the recent rise in the dollar in foreign exchange markets had created "a very tender situation," all comments on the dollar should come from him or from President Ronald Reagan, according to one official who was present. A Treasury spokesman said Mr. Baker categorically denied referring to a "tender situation," but acknowledged that he had reminded his colleagues that only he and the president were authorized to talk about the dollar.

Mr. Baker's remarks came during an Economic Policy Council meeting at the White House, immediately after his return from the economic summit in Toronto. There, the Group of Seven leading industrial democracies reaffirmed their goal of achieving exchange-rate stability and said that either a further decline in the dollar or an excessive rise would be "counterproductive" to the process of reducing trade imbalances.

Although the dollar's sharp rise in recent days has stalled at higher levels after real and rumored central bank intervention, most dealers said the market still supported its recent rally.

Officials in Washington and in the other major industrialized nations engaged in the dollar-stabilization effort have not been willing to say its rise so far is "counterproductive." That leads participants in foreign exchange markets to conclude that a further dollar rise is acceptable, therefore they buy more dollars.

Mr. Baker's reminder of the ad-of the president was seen as an effort to ward off conflicting interpretations and possible disputes within the executive branch.

Some administration officials are concerned that if the dollar rise continues, it could abort the boom in exports that has been fed by lower prices for U.S. goods abroad caused by the sharp depreciation of the dollar against major currencies during the past two years.

Supporting that concern, C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics, said in a telephone interview that the dollar's rise so far this year, if sustained, could add $25 billion to $50 billion to the overall current account deficit by 1992 by making American exports less competitive. Mr. Baker and other Treasury officials this week again refused all comment on the effects of the dollar's rise, except to cite the language of the Toronto summit com-

But Beryl W. Sprinkel, the chair-

would not have any immediate impact on the U.S. trade deficit. "I see no threat to adjustment in the year ahead," Mr. Sprinkel said. "I see no abatement in the rise in exports." In recent days, such U.S. officials as Clayton K. Yeutter, the trade representative, and Robert Ormer, the undersecretary of commerce for economic affairs, have expressed the same sentiment.

The dollar's current exchange rates are far below the peak levels of 1986 and 1987 that reduced demand for American manufacturing exports. Moreover, a rising dollar may have some political benefit, easing the fear of inflation and thus taking pressure off the Federal Reserve to pursue higher interest

Central bank intervention this week apparently was designed only to smooth the pattern of the increase, not to knock the dollar down, observers said.

Mr. Bergsten said he did not think the dollar's rise reflected a fundamental improvement in the underlying economic situation, but was purely technical.

The markets got onto the fact that the central banks are committed to supporting the dollar," he said, "because the underlying budget deficit problem can't be tackled by a lame-duck administration in any event.

When to their surprise the central banks didn't put a cap on the rise, the market operators decided they could continue to make money until the central banks come in in a convincing way."

Mr. Bergsten said he suspected that the central banks were besitant to put a stop to the rise, because they feared the markets would then test the downside of the dollar, perhaps touching off a sharp fall.

Adjusted discount window borrowings in the latest week averaged $541 million a day, producing an average $520 million a day in the two-week bank statement period ended

In the two previous statement periods, borrowings averaged $479 million and $582 million, for a three-week average of $527

According to Mr. Karydakis, that shows that the Fed has not changed its $550 million borrowing target, the level it is believed to have aimed for since late May.

Steven Slifer, of Lehman Government Securities, said the Fed's current borrowing target of about $550 million would yield an equilibrium funds rate of about 7% percent were it not for some inexplicable reluctance strated that it did not engineer the firmer "The latest numbers show in the clearest on the part of commercial banks to borrow funds rate, however. Indeed, the 14 U.S. money center banks have not borrowed in this fashion for four of the past five weeks.

Mr. Karydakis said, however, that it has simply taken three maintenance periods for the Fed's late-May tightening to work its way through the banking system. Economists may have concluded initially that the funds rate would trade at 7% percent, but it is now clear that funds will settle around 742 ercent, he said.

The Fed added reserves to the banking system every day of the latest week, but the funds rate firmed steadily nonetheless, rising from an average daily effective rate of 7.55 percent on June 23 to 7.87 percent last Wednesday. On Thursday, funds traded between 7% percent and 8% percent.

WHEN in 1960 John F. Kennedy picked Dean Rusk to be secretary of state, the soft-spoken Georgian was not his first choice. Kennedy would have preferred William Fulbright and actually asked Robert Lovett who turned him down. So he turned to Rusk, everybody's second choice. Amid the grandees of the New Frontier, Rusk stood apart:

He didn't go to parties, he was secretive.
Years later, after assassination and war had fractured the Democrats, Rusk was vilified by the Kennedyites, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. in "A Thou-sand Days" called him "Buddha-like" and said JFK had planned to fire him after the 1964 election. Robert F. Kennedy said the same thing, and John Kenneth Galbraith told Lyndon B. Johnson to sack him. By that time, LBI and Rusk — Southern boys who worked their way up from dirt-poor beginnings

- were getting along famously. So Rusk survived. In fact, he served as secretary of state longer than any other person in this century, save Cordell Hull. He capably faced an impressive series of international crises: the Bay of Pigs, Berlin, missiles in Cuba, the Congo, the Six-Day War. He was in the forefront of the negotiations and ratification of the nuclear test-ban treaty. He led American efforts to welcome the new African republics into the world community. He used the prestige of his office to push civil rights legislation at home.

There is of course the matter of Vietnam — that graveyard of reputations, not to mention lives. Alone of the senior officials of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, Rusk was present for the full eight, frustrating years of Vietnam policy-making, a process that collapsed in a heap in 1968. And during most of that time, Rusk's State Department bobbed along in the wake of McNamara's Penta-

Solution to Last Week's Puzzle

Center for International and Comparative Law at the University of Georgia. But though sympathetic, he is judicious and fair-minded. He says flatly that Rusk had an "exaggerated vision of American leadership and rectitude in the world." The author had a daunting problem. When Rusk left office in 1969 - on the verge of complete physical and mental collapse from overwork, says choenbaum - he took no official papers with him. He apparently never kept a diary and, like his hero, George C. Marshall, never wrote any memoirs.

Deprived of documentation, Schoenbaum has had to confine himself to the big picture, skipping gon, failing utterly to find a political solution.

Now comes a biography that attempts to tell Rusk's side of these great matters. The author, Thomas J. Schoenbaum, is clearly a witness for the defense -he is executive director of the Dean Rusk the minutiae of policy formulation to provide historical background and the occasional glimpse of character. Many will be disappointed that the Vietnam War is covered in less than a fifth of the book. Nevertheless, Schoenbaum presents new evidence in the continuing debate over the war. In doing so, he resuscitates the reputation of a decent and honorable man. In these pages, Rusk emerges as a completely self-effacing person, qualities that Schoenbaum says won him JFK's trust and confidence, whatever won him JFK's trust and confidence, whatever others might say.

Few men have had so much direct instruction in the consequences of being wrong. At age 79, he is still active as the Sibley Professor of International Law at the University of Georgia. He is unrepentant about his role in Vietnam: "Almost all his contemporaries — McNamara, McGeorge Bundy, Clifford, and the rest — repented of their initial hawkishness even before they left office," notes Schoenbaum. "Rusk's persistence can be explained by . . his loyalty to President Johnson, who even more than Rusk did not want to preside over an American Rusk did not want to preside over an American defeat." Loyalty up, in payment for loyalty down: in other words, the perfect staff man.

LONDON - Stefan Edberg was dead and gone. So was Ivan Lendl. Both were outplayed for two sets Friday. Both were in serious trouble in the third.

And yet, when dusk fell at Wimbledon, Edberg was in the final, after defeating Miloslav Mecir, 4-6, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4, and Lendl was still alive in his semifinal with Boris Becker after surviving three match after this sort of victory. "If I didn't have guts, I wouldn't have won today. At the beginning, I didn't feel as if I could do anything. The third set turned it around Lendl may end up saying those same things if he beats Becker. Mecir's downfall began at 3-all in the third set when he put Edberg in a 0-40 hole. He was cruising at that point, playing the kind of inscrutable tennis that makes opponents want to tear their hair out.

Trees and the Volcano

By Timothy Egan New York Tunes Service MOUNT ST. HELENS, Washington — One of the oddest stories in natural history is unfolding on this wounded volcano as three distinct forests, each reflecting the character of its caretakers, are flourishing on land once dismissed as a sterile moonscape. Logging companies, encouraged by the strong growth of a commercial tree farm here, argue that, with help from man, forest life can spring back from a natural disaster whose effects are much like the industry practice of cutting down all the trees in an area then burning off the remaining vegetation. Environmentalists cite the slowgrowing areas of the mountain that are untouched by man as evidence of how hard it is for a forest to protected monument has not regencome back when the surrounding land has been leveled.

The initial reappearance of plant life, in the first few years after the volcano's eruption on May 18, 1980, was heralded within the scientific community. But what is now causing much surprise and discussion among biologists is the rapid growth, especially on the commercial tree farms.

When the eruption wiped out 150,000 acres (60,000 hectares) of timberland, few scientists thought a living forest could begin to take shape in less than a decade. But this summer, less than five miles (eight kilometers) from the crater of the mountain, some replanted trees already have reached heights of 20 feet (6 meters).

In many areas of the blast zone, now covered by healthy stands of Douglas fir, maple and pine and populated by herds of elk and deer. it is hard to tell there was a castastrophe. In some cases, the wholesale cutting on nearby lands appear more disfiguring than the freshly greening areas of the volcano.

It took just a few seconds for the 300-year-old forest around the mountain to be leveled in the eruption, which blew off the top 1,400 feet of the mountain, killed 59 people, and caused more than a billion dollars in property damage. Most of the trees, including centuries-old evergreens that had withease, were knocked down by the growth. blast, which carried winds in excess of 300 mph and temperatures of (260 Centigrade). An ash plume as a timber farm.

rising to a height of 16 miles turned daylight to darkness and left deep deposits of sterile material on the mountain slopes. Within the blast zone, all forms of life were destroyed, a destruction so complete that President Jimmy Carter remarked, "It makes the surface of the moon look like a golf

Three new forests have sprung up since the disaster: one planted by the world's biggest private logging company, one planted by federal biologists, and one left alone and seeded by nature. On the north side of the mountain the Weyerhaeuser tree farm forms a visible line at the edge of the 110,000 acres that were set aside as a National Volcanic Monument. Left to the forces of nature, the area inside this erated as quickly as the Weyerhacuser tree farm or the United States Forest Service plantation. The land is caked, dry and bleak; a few willows and alder trees growing in stream beds. The lesson from the slow-growing natural forest is that barren land that is so far away from a seed source will take a long time to regenerate. Typically, seeds are carried by the wind from the cones of healthy nearby trees.

OME foresters apply this lesson to the large-scale clearing of trees from the land, saying a ravaged land, cut to excess, will not properly grow a new forest. "What we have on Mount St. Helens is essentially a huge clear cut," said Gene Slonicker, chief govern-ment forester for the mountain.

Weverhaeuser officials cite the difference between the natural area and their tree farm as evidence that man can grow a better forest than nature, a contention other biologists hotly contest.

On the eastern side of the mountain lies the third new forest, more than 9 million trees planted over 14,000 acres by the Forest Service.

The trees are smaller than the commercial stand on the other side, a difference foresters attribute to the character of the public forest, which was planted for aesthetics stood fires and lightening and dis- and other reasons beyond simple

Federal officials say the area is worth more as a tourist attraction more than 500 degrees Fahrenheit — a horticultural curiosity — than

Elia Kazan's Passions and Fury

By Megan Rosenfeld

Washington Post Service

New YORK — By most standards he's — By standards, he's an old man now. His hair is a dry white, and time has cut deep crevasses into his face. At 78, Elia Kazan could be spending his hours clipping bond coupons and playing tennis, but while time has slowed him, the passion, fury and arrogance that have driven his life are still fueling his days.

His latest product is "A Life." an exhaustive and exhausting bi-ography, a free-form reminiscence of many of the plays and movies he directed, like "Death of a Salesman" and "On the Waterfront," but more significantly of his interior life. His long, conflict-ridden relationship with his first wife, his unremitting and he now admits - neurotic infidelity, his lack of guilt about naming names before the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) during the Mc-Carthy era, his views of friends. former friends and associates such as Arthur Miller, Marlon Brando, Marilyn Monroe, Lee Strasberg, Tennessee Williams and so on.

The book is almost stridently revelatory. Kazan's intention, he said in an interview, was to be thoroughly honest, partly be-cause he thinks anything else would be worthless and partly because he no longer cares very much what people think of him. He believes in the primacy of arrogance, he said: that without it an artist cannot maintain integri-

Kazan has been and will be forgiven much, partly because he is quite hard on himself. Although there is only one thing he says he feels guilty about, as he looks back on his life, he does not spare himself when he passes out criticism. He looks back with discontent on the plays and movies he directed, seeing the flaws more vividly than the virtues. His success was hollow, the money he made pleasing but unimportant, many relationships unsatisfying. His best times, he says, started in his mid-'50s when he became a writer and began to focus his artistic explorations on himself. The major conflict of his life, ruling WASPs. In four years, he he says often, is that he wanted to ty, wealth without corruption.

And his final judgment, even with the caveats, is that he has.

And it is not quite true that he doesn't care what people think. There are six people he was very concerned about, so concerned he barely mentioned them in his book. They are his current wife and his five children. As a youth, Kazan was an out-sider, a child whose parents spoke English with an accent. In high school in New Rochelle, New York, his social high point was when a girl he liked took him to the prom so that her estranged boyfriend would think she had a date. He worked part of his way through preppy Williams College as a waiter: he was never elected to a club or befriended by the never danced, was known to re-

> For years afterward his sexual relationships were fueled by revenge: against the "smooth young bitches" who had ignored him in high school and college, and the men who represented the mainstream culture from which he felt excluded.

"I specialized in taking women away from men, particularly those handsome young fellows who played leading roles in films," he writes. "I never forgave Marjorie Valentine or forgot the night of the junior prom. I examined every member of the opposite sex I met for indications that she would be, if the occasion was right, unfaithful. marriage to Molly Day Thatcher in 1932 when he was 23. It wasn't long before he was having "casual boy-girl quick ones, easily forgot-ten," and within five years of his wedding had embarked on the most serious affair of his life, with an actress named Constance Dowling, the one woman about whom he feels guilty.
"My marital life, although I was devoted to my wife, was stifling to me. Dinner at 7 every night drove me nuts," he said. At 72, he married his third wife, Frances Rudge, now 41, a novelist and real estate agent. Two of her three children, the youngest now 10, live with them, and Kazan has had some difficulty with the role of stepfather.

But he says his marriage is happy; for the first time he has com-bined a strong, intelligent woman he respects with the sexy, uncritical one be desires.

In 1934 Kazan joined the Communist Party, resigning 18 months later because he questioned orders to take over the Group Theatre and guide it to political purity. Remaining a leftist, he nonetheless scandalized the entertainment community when, in 1952, he named 11 people who had been members of the party with him. He was one of the piggest names the HUAC landed.

Until now Kazan has refused to elaborate on his reasons for becoming a friendly witness. He writes that the people he named were already known to the com-mittee. In this belief, according to other writers, he labors under a delusion. Half of them had not been mentioned before.

Kazan made his final movie "The Last Tycoon," in 1976. He wrote his first novel, "The Arrangement," in 1967, and at that point knew he wanted to devote his remaining years to writing. He has since written six other novels.

During his peak earning years in Hollywood, he invested in taxfree bonds and now lives quite comfortably on them, as well as on his book earnings. He still goes to his place in Connecticut, although he has given it to his children, and there enjoys gardening, wood chopping and solitude. He never goes to the theater, rarely to the movies, and his His sexual life, he writes, did main interest is "just myself at
